

Boosting visibility as a working parent or carer

“There are long-term repercussions that inevitably come with the daily choices employees may well be making – choosing to consistently remain under the radar will impact confidence levels, relationships, mental health, and ultimately career prospects.” P&P Coaching

One of the current challenges many parents and carers are facing is finding the time and energy to devote to long-term career strategies such as being visible to the right people in the workplace. However, without this valuable skill, many find they do not develop the same career satisfaction and prospects as some of their peers.

The other challenge many employees are facing is around making flexibility work for their long-term future potential – and not to fall into the trap of becoming isolated and disconnected if they are regularly working remotely.

Helping employees find ways to be more visible to their managers, colleagues and teams will help increase their motivation, personal satisfaction and overall contribution to the business.

This 1-hour webinar will cover:

- What visibility is and what it means to you in your role.
- Understand the dangers of being ‘invisible’.
- Assess your own current levels of visibility using Harvey Coleman’s PIE model.
- Use a simple stakeholder analysis tool to boost your own visibility.
- Prepare how to communicate and then maintain your visibility strategy.

“ I was quite shocked when I realised that I hadn’t even considered the importance of being visible at work. I intend to take some of these actions and put them in place to make sure my manager and colleagues recognise everything I do! ”
